“Temporary workers” are those supplied to a host employer and paid by a staffing agency, whether or not the job is actually temporary. Whether temporary or permanent, all workers always have a right to a safe and healthy workplace. The staffing agency and the host employer are both responsible for providing and maintaining a safe work environment for those workers.

The staffing agency and the host employer must work together to ensure that OSHA requirements are fully met.

If you engage temporary or seasonal workers, consider tuning in for this webinar.
